Avoid Synthetic Fabrics

Scan here for the full article!

Did you know that twice as many microplastics are released when washing recycled PET? Researchers estimate that about half a million tons of tiny pieces of plastic come off our polyester, nylon or acrylic clothing. That is about 50 billion plastic bottles per year. Via the oceans these bits eventually end up back in our food and thus in our bodies.

This is why you should avoid polyester, polyamide, nylon and elastane as much as possible and opt for natural fabrics such as organic cotton, organic wool, hemp, linen when you can. These are biodegradable and therefore more environmentally friendly.

Support Your Local Retailer

Think farm-to-table but for fashion! Closer ties with suppliers allow for more transparency in production and labour practices. Complex, global supply chains can obscure these insights. COSH! champions the craftsmanship of artisanal products. These often offer superior quality, promising longer wear and many years of joy.

7 Shopping Tips From COSH!

1

Choose Honest Brands

The fast fashion industry depends on cheap labour to keep the prices as low as possible. Because of this, garment workers work in unsafe conditions for a very low income. Do you want to know if everyone in the process is paid a fair wage? Here are a number of things you can pay attention to.

In West-Europe you have a higher chance of fair labour. Strict labour legislation is applied here, which guarantees good working conditions. Does a brand produce clothes somewhere outside of Europe? Then COSH! investigates whether the factories have certificates such as the Sedex, SA8000, GOTS certificate, Fair Wear label or the Fairtrade Textile Standard. But don't pay too much attention to these certificates. Smaller brands who produce their garments in small ateliers or shops can't afford these certificates, even though they are in line with it.

Mind the Materials

The fashion industry requires enormous amounts of water and energy. And how clothing and accessories are manufactured and disposed of can amount to unmanageable waste mountains. Want to shop smarter? Here's how:

- Go Circular: Some cool brands upcycle fabric leftovers, nearly wasted materials or worn clothing into magnificent new creations.
- Choose Nature: Support brands that favour natural materials instead of fossil fuels. Synthetic fibres like polyester never fully degrade, which makes them environmentally harmful once the annual closet cleaning comes up, and they end up in a landfill halfway across the globe. Our top picks are organic cotton, organic hemp, organic linen, EcoVero, recycled cottons or wools and Tencel.

3

Diversity Yes! But Not in Our Garments

To truly support a circular economy—where materials are used, reused, and recycled—we need to make recycling easier. Surprisingly, even with today's technology, mixed-material garments are hard to break apart for recycling, leading to less than 1% of clothes getting recycled worldwide. Let's change that! Go for high-quality items made of a single fibre, like 100% organic cotton. These stand more chance of getting a new life.

6

Don't Fall For False Promises

Scan here for the full article!

Transparency is essential if we want to achieve a sustainable and trustworthy industry transformation. Greenwashing, which involves making false eco-claims for marketing, is one of the biggest challenges the industry and consumers face.

Want to find the real deal? Check www.cosh.eco for unbiased reviews guiding you to shop in line with your values.

7

Embodying Stories: The Magic of Second-Hand

Are you thinking of adding some vintage flair to your wardrobe? Here are five fantastic reasons:

1. Eco-Friendly: By not buying new, you cut down on CO2 emissions.
2. Waste Reduction: Giving clothes another round means less landfill waste.
3. Ethical Employment: Some second-hand stores provide jobs to those often overlooked.
4. Unique Finds: Stand out with one-of-a-kind pieces!
5. Savings Galore: Vintage often means value for money.
